

The Battle of Mons Aelian

A short archaeological field report from North Africa concerning the finds from a battlefield site only recently discovered. The report argues in detail for the last hours of a final stand for one legion - the Second Italian Legion - against a marauding band of native auxiliaries. For those interested in the development of Late Roman tactics and deployment, this report consolidates several known issues and allows a deeper insight into an obscure period. This is a short-story running to about 7,000 words or some 11 pages in traditional print and takes the reader into the world of the Late Roman legion, its ranks, command structure and fighting methods in this poorly-recorded period. Please note: this short story is also included in The Lost Expedition and Other Tales.
